RABINDRANATH TAGORE

head. That too is at an end". I asked if there should be any alteration to the arrangements for the day. He said there was no need for that ... Let me speak of another day. It was August 1932. He was in our Baranagar house. His only grandson Nitu was in England and was very ill. Nitu was his youngest daughter Mira's son. Andrews had taken Mira to England to help her bring Nitu back home. But Nitu died there. When the news came Rabindranath turned so still.' It was at this time that he wrote in a letter to Mira:

In the midst of all our lapses and omissions, all our troubles and sorrows, the major fact is that we have loved. From the outside, the tie may snap, but if we have been deprived of the relation within, then that lack would have been a great void. We have come to our human world. We have been united in many a relationship, and then when the time comes, we have to drift apart. Again and again this has happened and will happen again. Life is fulfilled with this happiness and this sorrow. Whenever there has been a gap in the world of my life, the larger life, I find, exists, it moves, and I must keep step with it with an undisturbed mind ... I loved Nitu much; besides, for you, an enormous sorrow weighed with me. But one feels ashamed to expose one's sorrow to other's gaze ... there was a suggestion to stop Barsha-Mangal in deference to my grief. I said, no, I shall bear my share of grief. (Mahalanobis, 'Rabindranath Tagore', 1974, p. 8)

His overwhelming realisation of the human predicament, both in his own personal life through the experience of the joys and sorrows of life, as well as in what he saw around him, turned him into the novelist of human relations. It led him to grasp the larger potential in the human being through the mingling of hate, love, pain, cruelty and terror. He expressed it all in his literature by immersing himself in a given human situation. In the process he became more truly human than the characters of his novels, plays and short stories. In his personal life he had occasion to face difficult relationships with courage and self-reflection. His critics have asked how he could have given his daughters in marriage when they were so very young. We have on record how he blamed himself when his daughter Mira's marriage failed. He did not hold Mira and her husband responsible for it. This is clear from what Prasanta Chandra Mahalanobis wrote to Mira's husband Nagen at the time: 'I have heard of the dissolution of your marriage with mixed feelings. It grieves me very much to think that such a step could not be averted, but in as much as it has become inevitable I am glad that the proceedings are over ... It is more than seven years ago that he [Rabindranath] first told me about you and Mira. It was the night before the 7th of Pous, and I had gone up to Santiniketan that very evening. The Poet said: "Mira was barely fourteen
